- It was observed that post-tenure review of teaching by tenured faculty is less emphasized by many departments and that there are opportunities for continuing review of teaching.
- It was noted that an important step in making the review process more effective is clarity about what a department means by “good teaching”; this may vary from discipline to discipline, but the criteria need to be articulated.
- Some cautioned against an overreliance on quantitative data in evaluating teaching. The importance of qualitative information (e.g., comments from students on the course evaluations) was noted.
- It was pointed out that student expectations are a critical element determining how successful a course or an instructor may be.

3. Provost's Report

- Members of the Council--including Pat Byrne as chair of Council--will be reviewing the report.
